

Uwe Zimmermann & Hugo Pascarelli

Weather conditions meant that matches could only be played during the course of a weekend, but both days saw good crowds turning out to enjoy fast demonstrations of the galloping game.

On the Saturday, Bank Hofmann drew 6-6 with Maserati, while Herend lost to Hohensteiner.

The following day, Herend and Hohensteiner each scored four goals, Hohensteiner making it to third place in the tournament.

The final saw Maserati defeat Bank

Clara with Marco Lello from Maserati and the team

Hofmann – which included Uwe Zimmermann and, playing his first tournament, Nico Pascarelli, by a narrow 5-4.

Best Playing Pony was Clara, owned by Walter Scherb, of Maserati.

Following the final, guests enjoyed the black tie Bank Hofmann Polo Night in one of Budapest's historic palaces. All were delighted to learn that the Open is going to become a fixture of the Hungarian – and indeed European – polo calendar.

As a matter of interest, the Hungarian Olympic polo team of August 1936 came fourth in the final standings. They drew 8-8 with Germany – and then, in a later game, defeated them 16-6; and lost 2-16 to Mexico. The winning gold medallists were the Argentine team.
